In the latter place Madame Estelle Decrest and her sickly son Albert had hired a magnificent suite of rooms for the winter. She was a quiet, melancholy sort of lady, of about 30. All her thoughts seemed centered in her boy. She paid all her bills regularly, saw no visitors, and received no letters. So much for madame.

M. Degrauti, junior (the jewoier), was a rather fast young fellow, very rich, and very fond of horses. The elder brother, at this time, was absent in Paris.

Dr. Jacob Valpass was a man of 32, and considered very clever. His father had left him some considerable property, but, as he was passionately devoted to his profession he still continued in practice. We have now sufficiently described the four

It was after 10 o'clock one night, and Dr. Valpass sat in his study. A person requested to see him. A tall, deeply-voiled lady entered. Dr. Valpass politely offered her a chair, and asked her the nature of her business. With a deep sigh, she threw back her veil, and the doctor's weaker human half surveyed her dazzling beauty in bewilderment.

She told her story in a quiet, brief manner. She had an only son, on whom she dotted passionately. He was subjected to fits of monomania. And, most extraordinary as it might seem, his desires lay in the fact that nothing but diamonds placed about him would satisfy his cravings. She had consulted the beat medical men in Europe, and they prescribed

Dr. Valpass took charge of this curi ous case, and soon became very intimate with Madame Deorest. To be brief, poor Val-pass fell deeply in love, and a month after her acquaintance he proposed to her and was accepted. Thus stood matters in December, 1851, and so closes the second

The last scene opens on the 4th day of rushing madly toward him.

"What is the matter, Estolle?"

"Oh, he is worse! Oh, come to him!

He drew forth his treasures and placed them about the boy. It was wonderful!
The boy danced with glee, clapped his

He then slowly left the room with downcast head. The enraptured mother flung herself into the arms of her savior, and with tears in her beautiful eyes thanked him from her heart. Then followed one long, delicious kiss, and the doctor was in the seventh heaven of happiness!
Madame excused herself for a moment
and left Valpass.

Haif an hour clapsed, then an hour;
then the doctor became fidgety. He approached the door; it was locked. For another hour did the doctor remain quietly in the room. Then a suspicion flashed like lightning across his brain.
He thundered at the door, the servants came running up, the door was forced open, madamo's sleeping room visited;
but left the birds had flown.

THE high places in England were very urative in what is termed "the good old days." In 1824 the then attorney general stated in the house of commons that the late Lord Elleuborough had refused $800,000 forthe office in his gift of chief clerk of the court of king's bench. When Lord Ellenborodgh heard that it was vacant he' was on horseback, and, slighting, he wrote in pencit on his saddle his son's appointment, the groom being witness. A Pretty Woman's Secret.

Fear of discovery, when she resorts to false hair and dyes, is a source of constant anxiety to her. The very persons from whom she most desires to hide the warding of her charms are the ones most likely to make the discovery. But there is no reason why she should not regain and retain all the beauty of hair that was her pride in youth. Let her use ATER'S HAIR VIGOR, and, not only will her hair cease to fall out, but a new growth will appear where the scalp has been denuded; and looks that are turning ray, or have actually grown white, will return to their pristing freshness and brilliance of color.
